Script

Every time the Olympic Games are held, large numbers of volunteers are recruited to do a wide range of jobs. The jobs they are given depend on their individual skills and expertise, such as language skills and medical knowledge. At airports and major stations, for example, volunteers guide both domestic and international visitors, telling them which trains or buses to take to the venues. They also offer information about sightseeing spots and hotels. At the Olympics venues, other volunteers give support to the athletes, spectators, and media, helping make sure everything goes smoothly.
